Pilots Soar Toward Northern Points in Good Flying Weather

Points in northern New York and Canada were the destinations of pilots launched from Harris Hill about noon today in the National Soaring Contest.

Air Notables To Attend Banquet

Many distinguished guests are expected for the closing banquet of the Ninth Annual Soaring Contest Sunday at 7:30 p. m. at the Mark Twain Hotel. Prizes and awards earned at the contest will be distributed at the banquet.

Guests will include George H. Earle IV, son of Governor Earle of Pennsylvania; Camay Vinet, director of aeronautics for the State of Pennsylvania; Lieut. Col. Robert Olds, commander of the Army's squadron of "Flying Fortresses;" Lieut. Gen. Friedrich Von Boetticher, military and air attache of the German Embassy.

The public is invited to attend the banquet, but due to limited accommodations reservations must be tion of Commerce by Saturday month or two, perhaps-the stately Langdon residence, corner of Main and West Church Sts., will be razed, the beautiful plot adorned with rare trees and shrubs left vacant With the Langdon landmark will go many fond memories, cherished thoughts of older generations, of this distinguished Elmira family, of Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) who married charming Oliva Langdon there, of Jervis Langdon, his mother and sister, Miss Ida Langdon who has decided the sightly home is too large and embodies too many responsibilities for her needs...

Stately Langdon Home Soon Will be Razed;

THERE ARE THOSE in Elmira who would enjoy having the Langdon house preserved for posterity as a Mark Twain memorial, because of its close association with the great humorist, who married, wrote and was buried in Elmira Others, realizing the financial outlay the course would incur, coupled with the fact Twain never lived on the premises, are convinced methods of paying lasting tribute Most of the original furnishings have been removed to other homes, those of family survivors If the residence were perpetuated as civic charge, there would be nothing left to remind our citizens and visitors of the famous writer who enjoyed its spaciousness, roaming between its wide walls and towering ceil-

WHAT STORIES the old Langdon home could tell of the past, anecdotes having to do with eminent guests, Rudyard Kipling, Henry Ward Beecher, his brother, Thomas K. Beecher and others If I am not mistaken it was here the renowned Kipling met the illustrious Twain Here a friendship was cemented that lasted a life-time and may, who knows, have extended itself into eternity The passing of the Langdon homestead does not mean the realization of a Mark Twain memorial is abanthat thoughts along this line are taking form in other and more practical channels Jervis accord with the efforts of admiring citizens to perpetuate the memory of this truly great man who was a frequent visitor here... He is anxious to lend his aid in any manner the citizenry of Elmira elects...

IT IS NO SECRET Henry Ford is anxious to secure and remove the Mark Twain study from Quarry Farm on East Hill to his Dearborn museum

There it would be placed under glass and preserved But Jervis Langdon's love of Elmira is too keen, and his regard for its citizens too great, to permit such sacrifice He realizes Elmira has first claim on this finest relic of Mark Twain's literary genius, and he would be the last to deprive the city of it It was there, often told, that Mark Twain wrote the immortals, Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, beside others of his noted contributions to the private and public libraries of this and other lands.... IT WOULD BE a great boon to the memorial project, if the cozy study, erected by Mrs. Susan Crane, a gift to her talented brother-in-law, could be sustained and properly guarded on its present site This brings the suggestion of a Mark Twain Park on the pinnacle of the hill. the tiny octagonal building, the setting in a ring of friendly shade trees and shrubbery, after the fashion of a precious ruby adorning a bride's finger think it is not taking too much for granted to say Mr. Langdon, if it were the public's wish, would be glad to donate land for this purpose Should the county be interested or the state, ment, coupled, perhaps, with a bust or full-sized monument of Mark Twain, mounted in Wisner Park or elsewhere, where it would be convenient to tourists; a shrine dedicated to one, estimable recollection of whom never will fade

SEYMOUR LOWMAN, whose active interest in Elmira began when he was a boy, hopes to see the day when the Mark Twain hillside memorial will become a reality, stretching out a long tentacle to connect with Sullivan Monument Park, a few miles south A suitable highway along the crown of East Hill joining nature's two beauty spots is not too much to anticipate Mr. Lowman holds the deed to a plot upon which such a plan would trespass But it would not be transgressing or encroaching at all, for the former lieutenant-governor is willing and anxious to donate land necessary to help cause his dream to come true What a truly beautiful drive could be fashioned in this way with its frequent panoramic views of the city, lying deep in the valley below In Chicago, visitors may motor through miles of parkways without invading a city street, one of the great beauties of the western metropolis Visitors in Elmira rave over our gorgeous hills and other scenic marvels The Lowman Highway, a connecting link between the Mark Twain dream park and Sullivan's Monument would lend the city another charm to lure, bewitch and facinate visitors privileged to view the scenic grandeur spread out before them,
