Music Composer Laments Haste with Which Radio Kills Song Hits

. . . Discussing the radio's effect on popular selecsong-life of ballads today . . .

are given such a generous airing at best their popularity lasts only a few weeks . . . Often their expectancy is much shorter acquaintance told me of a composerfriend who within a year introduced 10 hits and from their sale realized only a paltry $1,500 . . . So, these times, its seems, one finds it impossible to get a fortune for a song as was the case when George M. Cohen, Irving Berlin and others lent their talents in a big way . . . However, Will George Butler of Blossburg, Pa., appears an exception . . . Recently, Mr. Butler received a fine editorial written by Col. Henry W. Shoemaker, Pennsylvania archivist, member of the State Historical Society and president of the Pennsylvania Folk Lore Society . . . It commented on Mr. Butler's rendition at the Ole Bull celebration Sept. 24 . . .

MONG THE THINGS Col. Shoemaker wrote in his column-and-a-half of comment was this: "Dr. Butler, as is the case wherever he appears, 'stole the show' with the playing of his own composition, 'Visions Oleona' . . . He was encored so many times, he had to shift the bow, once held by Ole Bull himself, to his left hand . . . Imaginative listeners claimed they could see the tall figure of Ole Bull himself in the forested background of the Pennsylvania master's rostrum . . . Dr. Henry S. Drinker, member of the State Forest Commission, recalled Ole Bull by the poignant strains of Mr. Butler's music, which in its wizard power links mortals to the immortals" . . .

R. BUTLER has a picture, Which shows the late former Vicepresident Charles Curtis, who was part Kaw Indian, just outside his office in the Senate

Clemens (Mark Twain) courted and wed, and from where he was buried, is about to be sacrificed to commercial interests . . . The Wisner letter: "As a former Elmiran, I am interested in the preservation of the Langdon home and its beautiful grounds . . . If this is not effected, I shall expect to find on a later trip to your city, The Park Church converted into a motion picture theater, and Wisner Park itself a parking space for automobiles . . . Believe me, if Cornelia Wisner Jones, the mother of Madam Baker, were alive this would never happen . O tempora! O mores! . . . Why don't you get the governor of the state and your local senator and assemblyman busy? . . . It is more or less a matter of state interest." . . .

DUD YATES, prowling through D the West on a pleasure leave of absence, postcards: "Now I guess you will believe there is a Santa Claus" . . . Mr. Yates' greeting comes from Santa Claus, Ind., where he lurks a few days bound east or west... One never knows which direction Bud will take next . . . He threw away his compass as a boy, and his manner of dead reckoning takes him nowhere so quickly as just the places he wants to go . . My postcard says: "In keeping with the times, Santa Claus announces a second location for the convenience of his growing Christmas business at Santa Claus, Ind., in addition to his well known original post at the North Pole" . . . Evidently Indiana's thriving town of Santa Claus believes in capitalizing on its name better known in the nursery and baby grades than the names labeling the great cen-Building, Washington, with Dr. ters of population such as New

He desires an even, temperate climate for his future home, a place where a man isn't compelled to throw off his coat one moment and reach for a sweater another . . . So, he wrote to the government in Washington, asking in what locale he would be able to find a year around temperature with little variation . . . He was directed to investigate Virginia and Maryland . . . In the first named state he has decided to build a rambling home, near enough a city for convenience, where he may spend his remaining days.
